ABSTRACT

Assembled as a preliminary list of publications concerning Georgia journalism, this selected, annotated bibliography is intended to be useful to secondary teachers interested in history and journalism, to be helpful to students and scholars of mass media, and to indicate some obvious gaps in the literature of journalism as it pertains to the state of Georgia. Listings are divided into four categories: autobiographies, biographies, and reminiscences; communication law; history; and miscellaneous works. Also included are several volumes which apply generally to the field of mass media, particularly to some aspect of journalism history in the south. (JM)

INTRODUCTION

This brief monograph was assembled for several purposes. It should be helpful to secondary school teachers interested in history and journalism. Students and scholars of mass media may find it helpful in their study and research. Finally, it may point to some obvious gaps in the literature of journalism as it pertains to the State of Georgia.

Hopefully this is only a preliminary bibliography of Georgia journalism. Readers and users are invited to forward additional entries, suggestions and comments to Professor Eberhard in care of the Henry W. Grady School of Journalism. Especially needed are citations for local histories containing information about Georgia journalists, newspapers and broadcast stations, and information about local collections of manuscripts, documents, etc. At some later date, a second, revised edition of this bibliography may be published to include additional entries, comments on resources for research in Georgia journalism history, and an index.

Although this is a "selected bibliography," we have erred on the side of inclusion. Several volumes which have general application to the field of mass media have been included, particularly those which deal with some aspect of Southern journalism history.

Catalog numbers from the Memorial Library, University of Georgia, are included where possible.
